Beyond the Numbers

Have you ever noticed how much we, as a culture, are fixated with data? Every time I watch the Frogs play, the broadcasters spout stats, figures, records about every conceivable aspect of the game. Things like, “No visiting team wearing grey uniforms ever has won a game west of the Mississippi river during a full moon when the temperature is below 53 degrees.” Okay, maybe I made that one up, but you get the picture. And yet often times those stats, figures and records impacted the way we felt going into the game!

And have you ever noticed how much your own sense of peace and well-being is directly related to numbers? For instance, how we feel about our body is often closely related to the number on the scale or the size of our jeans. How comfortable we are at the end of each month is determined by the amount left over in our checking account; how well we sleep at night is sometimes connected to how much we owe on our credit card. Often times, our sense of value and worth is closely related to what we scored on that last math test, whether we met our sales quota last quarter or what we have in our 401K.

Michael Blastland and Anres Dilnot (great names for statisticians) have written a book entitled The Numbers Game: The Commonsense Guide to Understanding Numbers in the News, In Politics, and in Life. In it, they examine everything from the link between alcohol and breast cancer risk to baseball batting averages to fascinating assessments of the manipulation of data by politicians. Ultimately, they show how people are duped, frightened or falsely encouraged by data.

Blastland and Dilnot say that you and I expect numbers to do too much. We like the precision of numbers and want to believe that statistics can tell us all we need to know about the world.

Often they don't.

For the last several weeks, we've been involved in our annual giving campaign, Taking the Next Step. Throughout this journey, we've tried to stress that this is more about discipleship and our spiritual growth than the growth of the budget; it's been about the need of the giver to give, more than the need of the church to receive. As we've repeatedly said, generosity is a spiritual issue more so than a financial one.

In that way, this campaign has been different from anything I've ever been a part of—and different from anything that UCC has ever done. There were no conversations about the 'bottom line' or meeting the budget.

This has helped me see that the stats, figures and numbers, ultimately don't determine the faithfulness, health or vitality of a congregation or a congregant. I know of vibrant, growing churches that are in way over their head financially and struggle to pay the bills each month; and I know of stayed, dying congregations that are sitting on a load of cash. Which of those do you think are being more faithful? In the same way, I know of wealthy people who hold onto their money like it's the source of life; and I know countless individuals with very modest incomes who live generously and give way beyond their means. Whom do you think lives with more joy?

All I know is that all of us—both individually and collectively—are called to carefully and prayerfully consider who God is calling us to be, and then to give all that we have to responding faithfully to that call in our lives. How that happens can't be summed up in stats, figures or bottom lines, but in the way we live each day. Joy, contentment and wholeness come not when the numbers all add up, but when we live with gratitude, compassion and generosity.

But then again, what do I know? I went to seminary so I wouldn't have to take math.

As always, it is a privilege to serve as your pastor,

Rev. Dr. Russ Peterman, Senior Minister

Rev. Dr. Russ Peterman

How to connect and get involved at UCC

During November, a month focused on gratitude and thanksgiving, I am thankful for a church that is intentional about providing children and their families' meaningful opportunities to learn and grow in faith.

As we begin our second quarter of Discovery Kids, our Sunday morning children's program for elementary aged children, I am grateful for the individuals who gave of their time to imagine a new way of sharing the gospel with children at University Christian Church. I am amazed by the commitment of our current volunteers, who week in and week out, show up for children and meet each child where they are on their faith journey. The relationships are developing between our adults, who volunteer for our children each week, and the children who love to learn and make new friends, make a difference not only today, but also into the future as our church grows young and empowers young leaders to serve. The relationships and connections created amongst the adults that gathered to imagine Discovery Kids, continues to be a source of support and care for our children's program and one another.

All of these connections happen because individuals said "yes" to something new, they said "yes" to spending time with children, they said "yes" to serving on a committee with others. What will you say "yes" to this month? How will you connect with your faith, church, and individuals? I suggest you say "yes" to trying something new or showing up for a program that will guide you in discipleship and making connections with others. I know you will be blessed by being engaged—and those blessings lead to gratitude.

—Rev. Kera Watts, Minister of Children and Families

CHURCH GALLERY RECEIVES NEW PAINTING

Month of November

The Church and the Arts Committee announces the receiving of a new painting. The painting is a reproduction of Bartolome Esteban Murillo's The Resurrection of Christ. Murillo is recognized as one of Spain's finest Baroque artists, and he is remembered especially for his religious paintings.

While other paintings in the gallery tell the story of Christmas and the earthly ministry of Christ, this painting adds the crucial story of Easter—the Resurrection. Look for the new painting on the east wall of the gallery near the clergy office hallway.

The painting is a gift of Rev. Dr. Eldon and Mrs. Gloria Irving.
